

Steven Sirota - Bio

Growing up outside of Washington, DC, I never would have considered myself as being artistic or creative. While in high school, I had envisioned becoming an Architectural Engineer because I saw the world as lines and angles, very exact and with purpose. After my first year of college, life, however, changed course. I enlisted in the Air Force in 1971, got married in 1972, and my desire for becoming an Architect was put on hold.

Also in 1972, I made my first wire art piece for my father for his 50th birthday but life sometimes has other plans for us. I put aside the creative side of me and concentrated on raising a family.

Over the course of many years working for the Department of Defense and owning and operating my own business as well as working in the retail auto parts business, I retired.

After my dad passed, the original art piece was crated up and put aside. When I gained possession of it again, 50 years after I made it, my partner saw it for the first time and was amazed at my artistry, and she encouraged me to consider trying it again.

After retiring in early 2025, I became motivated again to pursue my creativity with wire and explore the possibilities, and thus “WIRE WORKS” became a reality.
